Travel the World with "WorldCat"
by Curt B. Witcher

Among the many challenges facing genealogical researchers is the challenge of trying to identify, and then locate, all the relevant data about a particular ancestor or potential ancestor. The explosion of indices and digitized data on the Internet has certainly aided millions of researchers in this quest for data. Typically, though, it is the databases with the greatest "star-power" that are frequented most often, almost to the exclusion of other very useful sites.

One of the databases that may be frequently overlooked by genealogists is "WorldCat." "WorldCat" is the largest bibliographic database of both published works, and a growing number of manuscript and archival collections, in the world. If you're attempting to pull together the largest pool of relevant data for your genealogical endeavors, it is a must-use data file.

"WorldCat" can be (and should be!) searched not only by surname of interest but also by geographic location (city, county, state, country), ethnic group (Germans, Finns, Irish, Swedes, African Americans, etc.), religion, and occupation. Tens of millions of records from library and archive catalogs around the world are included in this database. Searching on all five of the factors listed above can bring a significant amount of information to light. Besides indicating to you what publications may exist for the family name, ethnic group or geographic area you are researching, "WorldCat" also indicates which member institutions own the item. And increasingly, for items found in "WorldCat"

there are links directly from "WorldCat" into the owning institutions' online catalogs where additional, more specific information often can be gleaned.

There are a number of other features that can be explored when using "WorldCat" including the ability to email yourself the bibliographic records of the materials you are interested in exploring further--a super way to create a complement to your research plan and compile the beginnings of a great research log. You can also browse various indices to assist in executing better searches, export data, or initiate an interlibrary for those materials that can be borrowed between libraries.

"WorldCat" can be found in many public and academic libraries around the country and certainly here at the Allen County Public Library--the Main Library and the thirteen branches. In our library system, look under "E-Resources" on the right-hand side of the library's homepage <www.ACPL.Info> and click on "FirstSearch." "WorldCat" is one of the databases available through "FirstSearch." It is certainly worth your time.

Keep an eye peeled for new data on the FriendsOfAllenCounty.org website. The 2005 Allen County, Indiana burial permit index was added this month. And there will be an exciting file or two appearing in July. Also, please share this e-zine with family and friends who are interested in being among the first to learn about the grand opening in our new facilities early in 2007. Some of the first news broadcasts about that celebratory event will be through this e-zine.

Name Dictionaries

by Elaine M. Kuhn

What genealogist hasn't at one time or another asked the questions, "What part of the world did my name come from? What is the meaning of my name?" The Historical Genealogy Department owns a wide variety of given (first) name and surname (last name) dictionaries to assist researchers in understanding the origins of their names.

A great starting point for researching surnames is the "Dictionary of American Family Names" (929.4 Sm5da) by Patrick Hanks. This three-volume set details the origin of some 70,000 names found in the United States. Try also the "Encyclopedia of American Family Names" (929.4 R53e). For a sampling of names from earlier times, take a look at books such as "Middle English Surnames of Occupation 1100-1350" (929.4 F85m) and "Scottish Surnames of Colonial America" (929.4 D656sc). Surname dictionaries for particular nationalities and ethnic groups range from "Chinese American Names" (929.4 L929c) and "Japanese Names and How to Read Them" (929.4 K84j) to "Dictionary of German-Jewish Surnames" (929.102 J55MzL) and "Noms de Famille Normands" (929.4 M72n).

Patrick Hanks also co-edited with Flavia Hodges a very useful given name publication titled "Dictionary of First Names" (929.4 H19df). Other helpful books include "Baptismal Names," 4th ed. (929.4 W42), "Dictionary of Given Names" (929.4 L92d) and "Names and Name-Days" (929.4 A188n). Given name dictionaries of certain nationalities and ethnicities include "Dictionary of Ashkenazic Given Names" (929.4 B393da), "Irish Names" (929.4 Oc5i), "Handbook of African Names" (929.4 M25h), and "First Names of the Polish Commonwealth" (929.4 H675f). Researchers will also find dictionaries of nicknames to peruse such as "Nicknames Past and Present," 4th ed. (929.4 R698nb) and "Pseudonyms and Nicknames Dictionary," 3rd ed. (929.4 P949).

Another avenue for name researching is the Periodical Source Index (PERSI), a part of HeritageQuest Online and accessible to researchers in the Historical Genealogy Department (Note: You must be using one of the Allen County Public Library's computers to access the library's subscription to HeritageQuest Online. Otherwise, check with your local library to see about access in your area). From the library's home page select "E-Resources". Scroll down the alphabetical list until you see and then select "HeritageQuest Online". After clicking on "Search PERSI" from the HeritageQuest Online home page, select the "How-To's" section of the database. Enter the term "name*" or "surname*" in the keyword box to get a feel for the many name-related articles one will find in historical and genealogical periodicals available in the Department. Among the periodicals covered by PERSI is the quarterly publication from the American Name Society titled "Names" (how fitting, right?). Bound volumes of "Names" can be found at 929.4 Am25n.

To do your own searching in the library's catalog for name dictionaries, go to the library's home page at <www.ACPL.Info> and click on "Search Catalog". Once the search screen comes up, enter the terms "names personal" for a very broad search, or to limit your search use terms such as "names personal Jewish", "names personal Italian" or "names personal Lancashire".

Pennsylvania Negro and Mulatto Records

by Roberta Ridley

On March 1, 1780 the Act for the Gradual Abolition of Slavery was passed in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania by a vote of 34 to 21. Acknowledging and commemorating the State's own delivery from submission to British tyranny, the state pursued justice for Negroes and Mulattoes with the abolition of slavery and life servitude. All Negro and Mulatto slave children born within the state, after the passing of the law, could be bound to serve their master until twenty-eight years of age. Therefore, an owner of a slave or a servant for life (or till age thirty-one years) currently residing in the state, was required to register these persons with the county Clerk of the court. Any slave not registered by the deadline of November 1, 1780 was to be immediately emancipated. The registration distinguished these slaves from all other persons.

The chronological and partially indexed registration records contain amazing genealogical information: the owner's name, occupation, and residence; the names of the slaves and servants together with their ages, gender and birth dates for the children born in 1780 and later. Entries often give the slave child's mother's name and her previous owner, and previous location. The data provides names that supplement census records during a period when the head of household's name is the only name recorded in the federal census.

An example is the 1790 Cumberland County, Pennsylvania census showing that Samuel Rippey owned two slaves and William Rippey owned five slaves. In the Cumberland County 1791 "Returns for Negro & Mulatto Slaves," we find a related listing on September 13, 1791. William Rippey is registering a slave child named Hannah (female), born April 26, 1790, who is the child of a slave woman named Rachel (former property of Samuel Rippey, deceased, and William's father).

The ACPL Historical Genealogy Department microfilm collection includes these Pennsylvania records for Adams, Bedford, Bucks, Centre, Cumberland, Fayette, Lancaster, and Washington Counties. The films contain Registers of Negro & Mulatto Slaves, Birth Returns & Returns for Negro & Mulatto Slaves, Slave Children Born after the Year 1780, Mayor's Registry of Colored Persons, Inventories of Estates, Deeds, Record of Marks, Receipts, and Certificates of Freedom. The records range in date from 1776 to 1849 and will vary by county.

These Pennsylvania County collections provide information on more than one culture line and could lead to more.

The Historical Genealogy Department notes with regret the death in January of Rodney Hartwell of Daggett, California, founder of the Augustan Society and editor of many periodicals indexed in PERSI.
