Bigger and Better Bytes
by Curt B. Witcher

This past month has seen a flurry of virtual activity on the library and the Genealogy Center websites. There are some amazing opportunities for research and participation outlined in the following. I invite you to take a look.

The "Pence Descendants" online collection went live this month and can be found at <www.GenealogyCenter.info/search_pence.php>. The data presented at that site represents more than four decades of genealogical research done by Richard Pence. Many of you may recognize the name of the compiler--Richard is among the pioneers of computer genealogy. He was part of that first group of visionaries who truly saw the power that technological advances would bring to the genealogical field, and further, shared that vision in many books, articles, and lectures over the years.

It is an honor for the Genealogy Center to host the "Pence Descendants"--a data file of more than seventeen thousand searchable records. One can execute a basic search by the first name of a Pence ancestor or an advanced search by first name of a Pence ancestor, birth year, place of birth, death year, place of death, spouse's first name, and/or spouse's last name. Over the coming months, Richard's textual collection, as well as other electronic files, will become part of the Genealogy Center's collections. It is an incredible addition of data for those interested in Pence family research.

We remain grateful for the tremendous work volunteers in our area continue to do in making historical data available for researchers. This month, with the addition of more cemetery transcriptions by Jim Cox and Penny L. (Baughman) North, we reached a milestone of more than one hundred "Indiana and Other States" databases searchable on the GenealogyCenter.Info site. We remain strong in our commitment to make increasing amounts of digitized historical data available on the web.

More than one thousand pre-1886 burial records for St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church (Allen County, IN) were added to GenealogyCenter.Info in June. That brings the total number of Allen County, IN Church burial records contributed by our stellar volunteer, Margery Graham, to more than 6800! Church records are so very valuable for researchers investigating time periods that pre-date the civil registration of vital records. Newspaper accounts and church records often are the best sources of birth and death data in pre-civil registration time periods. Even in times of civil registration, one always wants to find the maximum number of records to document an ancestor's life events. This collection of records is a very useful resource for those looking for early Allen County connections.

In June, a joint project of the library's Genealogy Center and the Indiana Genealogical Society was kicked off with the posting of a new data file, "Indiana's African American Settlements." www.GenealogyCenter.info/search_inafram.php Compiled by Genealogy Center staff member, Dawne Slater-Putt, and cross-posted on the Indiana Genealogical Society's website, this database is part of an ongoing, larger study of Indiana's African American settlements from their earliest days through about 1930. It contains more than one thousand records and includes each person's name, approximate year of birth, date of death if known, and the names of the townships and counties with which the individual was associated. Women are cross-referenced under their maiden names, if known. Names and other data will continue to be added to this database, and new information is always welcome.

In the waning hours of this month, an exciting new data file was added to GenealogyCenter.Info through the dedicated efforts of a former Allen County Public Library employee, Anne Dallas Budd. Anne has been contributing to the genealogical community for many years through her excellent research, writing, lecturing, and work on the Periodical Source Indexing Project. Her latest contribution is an index to obituaries found from 1900 to 1912 in the "Evangelical Messenger," an English-language, weekly denominational publication associated with the Evangelical Church. www.GenealogyCenter.info/search_evanmessenger.php More than thirty-three thousand records were created to assist researchers in finding obituaries for those thirteen years. Though one will certainly want to read the actual published obituaries as they are so rich with family data, the index entries Anne has abstracted provide one with a tremendous amount of information.

Finally, through the efforts of our colleague, John Beatty, and his work with the Fort Wayne-Allen County Historical Society, we have obtained an image of a historic ribbon detailing Fort Wayne, Indiana's reaction to the assassination of President Lincoln. It is a most interesting historical artifact. Take a look at www.GenealogyCenter.info/doc_lincolnribbon.php.

This truly has been a month of bigger and better bytes!

School Yearbooks and Alumni Directories
by Dawne Slater-Putt, CG

October 28, 1897, freshman Charles Krinn had a new haircut, according to the Marion High School

"Juggernaut" (977.202 M33j 1897). Yearbooks can be a rich source of information for adding color to the names, dates and places on a pedigree chart.

For each class, the "Juggernaut" included a group photograph, names, history, officers, colors, motto and yell. The annual detailed clubs, football teams and excursions; listed the alma maters and degrees of teachers; and included poetry, essays and jokes. A calendar featured a fact about an individual student for each day. Many of these appeared to be tongue-in-cheek, including the note about Charles Krinn's haircut. The Alumni Record listed each graduate in the school's history and his or her status in 1897: occupation, residence and women's married names. Some were noted as deceased.

The Genealogy Center collection includes yearbook titles from nearly 1500 schools and more than 500 colleges, as well as more than 200 alumni directories that each supply brief biographical details on the graduates of a single institution. The Center actively seeks yearbooks and new titles continue to be cataloged. To determine whether the collection includes a specific yearbook, researchers should search the online catalog for the subject "school yearbooks" or "college yearbooks" and the desired city or state. Also, a name index for the yearbooks of three of the larger high schools in Allen County, Indiana is available at <http://www.GenealogyCenter.Info/search_acyearbooks.php>

Information typically found in yearbooks includes names and photographs of students, teachers, clubs and athletic teams. Other information varies by time period and individual school. Earlier books may include class colors, yells, mottos, verses, essays, and sections on alumni. Recent books typically include candid photographs, individual student pictures and sometimes an index. Annuals of all time periods may have advertisements for local businesses.

Other sources for yearbooks include city, county and state libraries where the school is located and the collections of local and state genealogical and historical societies. In some cases, digital images of yearbooks may be available online. The U.S. School Yearbooks database at Ancestry.com contains an estimated 6,151,452 personal names. This collection includes digitized annuals from schools, colleges and universities. It is searchable by name, with limiters of state, city, school name and yearbook year. Researchers also may browse the database by state, city, school and year.

Virtually all yearbooks found in library collections or online will be second-hand, rather than pristine copies. This is a boon for genealogists since researchers may find the signature of a relative who was a classmate of the original yearbook owner. A high school annual also may be the only inspiration for a mental picture of Grandma as a teenager, chanting her class yell: "Hobble, Zick, Rah! Boom-a-lack, Bah! '99, right in line, Zig-sag, Ah!"

Joseph Gavit's American Deaths and Marriages
by Cynthia Theusch

Researching in the early 1800s, we often experience difficulty in locating important vital records to document events in our ancestors' lives. The two reel microfilm collection of Joseph Gavit's "American Deaths and Marriages" may help you to locate those elusive dates.

Joseph Gavit, a librarian at the New York State Library, spent approximately ten years abstracting marriage and death notices from sixty-five newspapers onto index cards. The end result contained about 40,000 marriage and death notices that were published principally between 1784 and 1829, although some later dates are included. Notices are concentrated on events in the state of New York, but Mr. Gavit also included those mentioning marriages and deaths in other states, Canada, and a few other countries. The complete set of death index cards are on one reel of microfilm and those indexing marriages are on the other. The cards are arranged in alphabetical order by the name of the decedent, for deaths, and by the names of both bride and groom, for marriages.

Each index card contains the event, newspaper, date, surname, first name, and place of event. In addition, entries may mention related persons (parents, spouse, children, and siblings), occupation, residence, and military, patriotic or governmental service. There is also a possibility of learning whether the individual's spouse or parent was deceased at the time.

A typical death notice abstract reads: "Died Argus 20 Oct 1829. Holmes. At his residence in Sampson Co., N.C., on Tuesday, 26th ult., Gen. Gabriel Holmes, in his 61st year; educated at Cambridge, and for many years a public officer, in 1821 elected Governor of North Carolina. Representative Elect from the District of Wilmington to US Congress." A typical marriage entry reads: "Married. Albany Gazette 13 June 1811. Abbott-Wolford. At Schenectady, on Sunday, 9th inst., by Rev. Mr. Bogardus, Miss Eliza Abbott, dau. of Major Asa Abbott, to Mr. John Wolford, Jr., both of Berne."

There is a published index compiled by Kenneth Scott entitled "Joseph Gavit's American Deaths and Marriages, 1784-1829: Index to Non-Principals in Microfilm Copies of Abstracts in the New York State Library, Albany, New York" [974.7 Sco8j]. Two separate indexes in this volume contain the names of other individuals mentioned in death notices and wedding announcements, such as ministers and/or parents. It does not contain names of the deceased, or of grooms and brides. Page numbers given refer to the microfilm pages.

Preservation Tip of the Month--Removing Deteriorated Rubber Bands by Becky Schipper

Removing deteriorated rubber bands that are on your old documents or family papers, albums, and books can be a bit of a challenge. Before you begin the task, you will need a microspatula and weights. Eliminating deteriorated rubber bands requires a very light touch. And it is a tremendous help if the documents or papers are in good condition.

To eliminate rubber bands that are soft and sticky, place the document on a clean, flat, substantial surface. Hold the document in place with a weight on each end. Gently lift the rubber band with one hand and, with the other hand, slide the microspatula between the paper and the rubber band slowly separating the two.

To remove residue left by dried rubber bands use the microspatula to gently scrape the residue from the paper. Be careful not to damage the paper in the scraping process. Removal of rubber band residue or tacky material from fragile documents or photographs should be done only by a conservator.

An Opportunity to Support the Genealogy Center
by Curt B. Witcher

Last week, a new graphic appeared on the Allen County Public Library's main webpage. In the bottom right-hand corner of the page--you may need to scroll down to see it--there is a graphic with the words, "Support Your Library, Foundation or Friends." This is a new link to the library's online donation process. You can also use the following link:
<www.acpl.lib.in.us/aboutus/donations.html>

When you click on the orange graphic, you will be led to a page that offers you the opportunity to donate to the library, to donate to the ACPL Foundation which takes care of endowment funds for library services and departments, or to donate to the Friends of the Library. I like giving gifts that "continue to give," so I would click on the link in the "Donate to the ACPL Foundation" section and use the "Gift Designation" drop-down menu to find "Genealogy Endowment Fund." Indeed, I already have--and it's pretty slick. Complete a few simple online forms and you're done--it's that easy.

No matter where you're doing your research, if you have access to the web, you have access to a growing number of searchable databases through the Genealogy Center of the Allen County Public Library. Consider supporting our efforts by making a donation to the Genealogy Endowment Fund. Together, we will continue our long-standing tradition of service excellence. We deeply appreciate your support.

Tree Talks for August: Preserve Your Family Treasures

What do you do with the original documents, antique quilts, and photographs that you acquire as the family's historian? Where do you put these materials and how do you make sure they are preserved for future generations? The end of summer will bring Rebecca Schipper, the Allen County Public Library's Preservationist, to answer some of these questions in her presentation "Preserving Family History: Basics of Care & Storage" on August 22, 2009, at 10 AM in Meeting Room A. Becky will discuss the correct storage and care of textiles, books, documents, and photos. Mark your calendars for this free program! Register by calling 260-421-1225 or email Genealogy@acpl.info .
